Things to Do in HoustonWhen you want to impress a client or just grab some of Houston's most exquisite food, you'll find terrific options in downtown Houston and neighborhoods such as Montrose and River Oaks. To close the deal, grab a juicy steak at Pappas Bros Steakhouse downtown. For the best power lunch in the city, head over to La Griglia between River Oaks and downtown, which is the preferred choice for both local and traveling businesspeople. A great lunch spot if you're with a group of people all wanting different foods is Conservatory, Houstons first food hall. Featuring barbecue, poke, pizza, pho and more, Conservatory has something for everyone in a relaxed environment. When you want to see the most interesting part of Houston and get some exercise, head over to the Houston Museum District. Situated in the heart of the city, this area features four walkable zones and 19 museums that cover science, history, art, and more. Traffic and Parking in Houston Houston Houston has a notorious reputation as one of the worst traffic cities in America, despite a sophisticated network of expressways and the Interstate. Predictably, traffic worsens during the peak times when commuters travel from the city to the outskirts or vice versa. The only way to avoid these slow-downs is to drive during non-peak hours or stick to neighborhoods close by.Parking is somewhat troublesome downtown and in other popular areas, but the city has many parking garages and on-street parking for your convenience. Link to this page: They ought, with equal care, to have preserved the FEDERAL form, which regards the Union as a CONSOLIDATION of the States." And it is asked by what authority this bold and radical innovation was undertaken? The act, therefore, establishing the Constitution, will not be a NATIONAL, but a FEDERAL act. That it will be a federal and not a national act, as these terms are understood by the objectors; the act of the people, as forming so many independent States, not as forming one aggregate nation, is obvious from this single consideration, that it is to result neither from the decision of a MAJORITY of the people of the Union, nor from that of a MAJORITY of the States. The difference between a federal and national government, as it relates to the OPERATION OF THE GOVERNMENT, is supposed to consist in this, that in the former the powers operate on the political bodies composing the Confederacy, in their individual capacities; in the latter, on the individual capacities composing the nation, in their individual capacities, in the latter, on the individual capacities. But if the government be national with regard to the OPERATION of its powers, it changes its aspect again when we contemplate it in relation to the EXTENT of its powers. That consideration naturally tends to create great respect for the high opinion which the people of America have so long and uniformly entertained of the importance of their continuing firmly united under one federal government, vested with sufficient powers for all general and national purposes. Let us therefore proceed to examine whether the people are not right in their opinion that a cordial Union, under an efficient national government, affords them the best security that can be devised against HOSTILITIES from abroad. It is of high importance to the peace of America that she observe the laws of nations towards all these powers, and to me it appears evident that this will be more perfectly and punctually done by one national government than it could be either by thirteen separate States or by three or four distinct confederacies. Because when once an efficient national government is established, the best men in the country will not only consent to serve, but also will generally be appointed to manage it; for, although town or country, or other contracted influence, may place men in State assemblies, or senates, or courts of justice, or executive departments, yet more general and extensive reputation for talents and other qualifications will be necessary to recommend men to offices under the national government, -- especially as it will have the widest field for choice, and never experience that want of proper persons which is not uncommon in some of the States are united under one government, there will be as many different national civil lists to be provided for -- and each of them, as to the principal departments, coextensive with that which would be necessary for a government of the whole.
