New York City boasts numerous Starbucks stores, and you may wonder; how many Starbucks are in New York City? There are approximately 350 Starbucks shops in New York City. I love that Starbucks has established itself extensively, and I can get my favorite latte in almost all cities across the United States. I travel to New York City frequently for business, and it is satisfying to have many Starbucks stores where I can get my drinks. Read on to learn more about Starbucks in New York City. The first Starbucks store was opened on April 22, 1994. The store stood at 87th & Broadway until its closure after the end of the ten-year lease in 2003. Many people considered the store an unofficial landmark in New York City. New York City has been at the center of coffee culture since the first coffee barrels arrived in New Amsterdam from Dutch. The city is considered United States original coffee town. In the 1600s, coffee was a luxury only enjoyed by a privileged few, but having coffee became a patriotic act as colonies started demanding independence. Since then, coffee has become an important part of life in New York, and the city became the countrys coffee capital as Manhattan became recognized as the Coffee District. With coffee capturing the American peoples imagination, Starbucks, founded in 1971, announced its entry into New York City in 1993. For Starbucks CEO, Howard Schultz, venturing into New York City was special since it is not only the biggest city in the country but also his hometown. Since coffee was becoming extremely popular nationwide, there was significant competition. The CEO and his team aimed to provide quality products and services. The company first stayed away from high rent and high-end locations to keep costs down. On April 22, 1994, Starbucks opened its first store in New York City, located at 87th & Broadway. The store was by then the biggest Starbucks shop the organization had ever opened and showcased the companys design. The store features two espresso bars, comfortable seating and improved technology for better services. Starbucks aimed to open 100 stores in the city within four years, which was quite an audacious objective given it only had 300 shops worldwide at the time. The company opened ten more coffee shops in 1994, including its biggest store yet at the time, which features 4,000 square feet in Greenwich Village at Astor Place. Over the years, Starbucks in New York City has grown and added Community Stores in Jamaica, Queens and Bed-Stuy, Brooklyn, which support social and economic changes by offering job training for youths and hiring locally. One of the Starbucks Reserve Roasteries is also located in New York City. The New York City reserve roastery is the biggest Starbucks store, with 23,000 square feet. It features different areas, including the main bar, experience bar, scooping bar, arriviamo bar, handpicked at the roaster area, roasting area, and princi.
