

I'm not a bot

Hi Folks, When you're reading a book that is divided into several chapters, what is the accurate way to say it?!) I'm already on chapter 8.2) I'm already at chapter 8.3) I'm already in chapter 8. I think I would normally use "on". But maybe "at" in some circumstances. In AE, all 3 prepositions are used before "chapter 8". The difference in meaning is small, and may be different in different AE and BE regions. Here are the meanings in my dialect: I'm already at chapter 8 = This is the chapter I am starting. I have finished chapter 7. I am ready to start chapter 8. I'm already in chapter 8 = I am in (inside) chapter 8. I have read part, but not all, of chapter 8. I am reading chapter 8. I'm already on chapter 8 = Chapter 8 is my current assignment (from a teacher, or from my own plan for reading the book).Note "on" does not say if you're already partway thru 8 (like "in") or about to start 8 (like "at"). If I'm not being specific about the exact point in the chapter, I'd use "at". Sorry, dojibear, but "at" doesn't necessarily suggest to me that I'm ready to start chapter 8 (after having just finished chapter 7)-- it could mean at any point in the chapter, I think, as the whole chapter 8 can be, and would usually be, considered a point in the book. Am I missing something?Thanks. Thanks, Englishmypassion. I was thinking too narrowly. I was thinking about one situation where I would use "at", rather than all the meanings "at" could be used for. I wonder if the word we use is affected by the question we are answering: What point are you at? Where are you now? What are you reading now? How far along are you?By saying "a point in the book" you are using a very common metaphor, that reading the book is like a journey or a race. At any time you are at some "point" along the race track. Questions like "Where are you now?" and "What point in the book are you at?" use this metaphor. I can't imagine using 'I'm in chapter 8'. I'd mark it wrong in this context.'I've already got up to chapter 8', is my British English version. I might say 'I'm at chapter 8' if I was about to start that chapter.The question I would expect is 'Where are you up to?' or 'Where have you got up to?' Nothing at all about 'points', unless this is a very specific question about what happens in chapter 8. "What point are you up to in chapter 8?" I just realized I would be comfortable saying "I'm in the middle of Chapter 8." (But not "in Chapter 8".) Also:just starting Chapter 8partway through Chapter 8almost finished with Chapter 8Etc. In BE, of the original three choices I'd use "on".I don't think "at" really works, and "in" would make it sound as if I were a character in the story: 'I'm in chapter 3'. In response to a question such as "How far have you got?", 'I'm [already] up to chapter 8' would work. Hey everyone I've heard several people say "This topic is on chapter 4" but a few minutes ago I read "This topic is in chapter 4" Are they the same? Which one is the correct one? Thanks in advance. It depends on what the person means.If the topic is within the text, then it is in chapter 4. Chapter 4 contains the topic.If the topic is outside the text, discussing chapter 4, then it is on chapter 4 or about chapter 4. The content of the topic is discussion about chapter 4. If the topic is concerning Chapter 4 then you would say "It is on chapter 4" If it is contained in chapter 4 then "It is in chapter 4" Hey everyone I've heard several people say "This topic is on chapter 4" This topic is about Chapter 4, but a few minutes ago I read "This topic is in chapter 4" This topic is found in Chapter 4. Are they the same? Which one is the correct one? Thanks in advance. They're both correct with different meanings. Thanks a lot everyone. Hey everyone I've heard several people say "This topic is on chapter 4" but a few minutes ago I read "This topic is in chapter 4" Are they the same? Which one is the correct one? Thanks in advance. I think the most usual construction would be "today's topic is Chapter 4" (you could substitute a variety of terms for 'today's - this/next week's; this/next term's etc etc etc). I don't think I've ever heard "This topic is on chapter 4". "This topic is in chapter 4" might (though I think it's a pretty unlikely sentence) mean "you can find the topic we are talking about in chapter 4". But it sounds pretty strange to me I think the most usual construction would be "today's topic is Chapter 4" (you could substitute a variety of terms for 'today's - this/next week's; this/next term's etc etc etc). I don't think I've ever heard "This topic is on chapter 4". "This topic is in chapter 4" might (though I think it's a pretty unlikely sentence) mean "you can find the topic we are talking about i chapter 4". But it sounds pretty strange to me Well, one time when this could be used is in a message board/forum about a book, where the members discuss it chapter by chapter. "This topic is about chapter 4. I wanted to ask you guys on the forum what Huxley meant on page 38 in chapter 4, when he says..." I prefer "about" instead of "on." "Where can one find the discussion of soma and female sexuality in Huxley's Brave New World?" "Oh, that topic is in chapter 4 (of that book)." You don't really even need a time. You can simply say "The topic is chapter 4." Would it be wrong (although I am almost sure it would, but need it verified)This topic is in the fourth chapter. If you're reading the book and you have read as far as Chapter 4, then you are "on Chapter 4".You might also be "in the middle of Chapter 4" - but not "in Chapter 4".
